Bio

Maryna is a third-year Computer Science student at Lviv Polytechnic and the head of her group of 25 students. She is the link between the group and the lecturers: she passes on deadlines, changes of schedule and questions in both directions. Every lecturer prefers a different messenger, so she keeps Viber, Discord and email chats open at the same time and copies the same message into each of them. Messages get lost, and she is often blamed when someone missed an announcement. She also worries about fake accounts that pretend to be a lecturer or the dean's office, because in general-purpose messengers anyone can take a name and a photo.

Goals

- Make sure every student in the group receives every announcement on time
- Keep one clear communication channel with each lecturer instead of many messengers
- Organize subgroup chats (for labs, projects, retakes) together with the right lecturer

Core needs

- Create a subgroup chat with a lecturer inside the platform, with access limited to its members
- One place for all lecturers and the group, instead of a different messenger for each
- Verified accounts: every lecturer and student is linked to the university registry
- Announcements with read confirmation, so she can see who has not seen them
- Protection against account takeover and impersonation, with clear roles

Frustrations

- She repeats the same message in Viber, Discord and email, and some of them are still missed
- General-purpose messengers have no real check of identity, so fake lecturer accounts are possible
- Lecturer accounts can be hijacked, and students may follow false instructions or links
- She cannot create a private subgroup chat with a lecturer without sharing personal phone numbers
- She has no proof of who has read an announcement, but she is held responsible for it
